

As one of the four cross-industry divisions of the National Safety Council, the Labor Division collaborates with all NSC divisions, government representatives, and other partners committed to improving the safety, health, and environmental conditions of the labor force. Through active participation in the division meetings, union members, safety stewards, Labor Division participants, their employers, and affiliated unions gain year-round educational and networking opportunities.

The Labor Division will host two events in 2026: a multi-day workshop in Baltimore from May 4–8, and the annual meeting held in conjunction with the NSC Safety Congress & Expo in September in Indianapolis. Both events feature keynote speakers, educational sessions, special and professional interest committee meetings, an awards luncheon, and a networking reception. Attendees have opportunities to connect, share insights, and learn effective safety practices they can apply within their own organizations. Participants typically include Labor Division members, union members, regulatory personnel, and other safety professionals.

Organizations can support and engage with the NSC Labor Division by sponsoring these events, helping us attract new participants and build meaningful partnerships. Increased attendance and a broader range of session topics ensure that local unions and employers have workers who return with valuable, practical safety insights, strengthening collaboration and elevating safety performance across workplaces. Sponsors also have the special opportunity to make their contribution in honor or in memory of a safety leader, creating a powerful tribute that recognizes and celebrates an individual's impact on the field.
